

The Check-In: Participants take turns to express their present moment feelings and thoughts. With special attention to avoid attempts to rescue, fix, or analyzes each other's' expressions. This allows each person to get in touch with themselves, be heard, and to hear each other without the burden of giving or receiving "advice." Instead, everyone's present life experience is, simply honored through listening to his or her feelings and thoughts. This is also a preparatory process for self-empathy (getting in touch with one's own feelings, thoughts, and values during difficult conversations), and by listening, a first step to giving empathy to others.
